

Editorial

Aikaterini Divoli MD, PhD

PANDEMIC - THE OTHER SIDE

Using common sense or simple logic

We live in the COVID-19 times and the contradicted opinions for the confrontation, by a substantial portion of the population, concerning the restrictions, especially the wearing of the mask and the vaccination. I will not put on the mask, it is not necessary. I will not have the vaccination, it is my concern.

Really, how much is this a personal matter except in some occasional medical cases?

From the very early age we learn that our freedom ends up to the point where we do not annoy or harm or restrict or insult persons near us.

How can persons infected with the COVID-19 comfortably circulate among people without taking protection and contaminate anyone near them?

What are interdependency and interresponsibility and how are they applied?

Is it really a personal matter or a universal and deeply social one?